

5 tips on how to stay safe online

post n°1

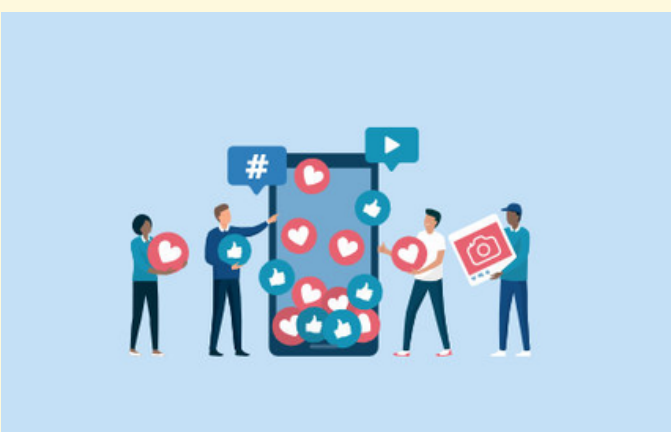

You mustn't share any personal information because online there are lots of hackers who could steal it. For example they can steal your PayPal data, your passwords and even your e-mail. If it happens, you have to refer that to someone who can help you to recover your data and to make it private.

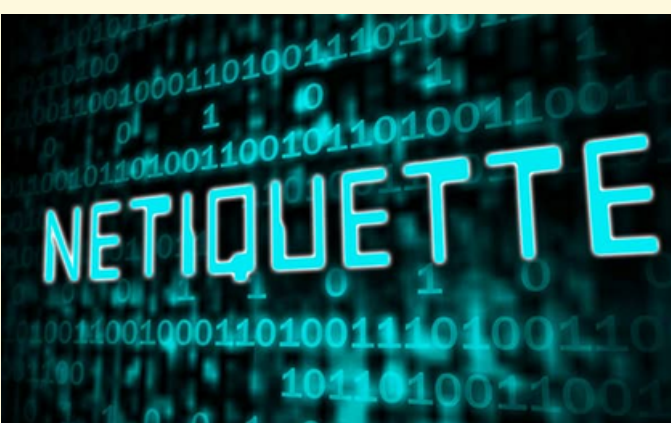

If you want to be safer when you create your social media account, I recommend setting the profile to private. By doing that, people, before seeing your content must be accepted by you, also you can accept the friend requests only from people you know and you can trust.

Never meet people you've met online without warning your parents. If you really want to meet them make an appointment in crowded places and bring with you at least a friend.

You have to be careful when you decide to post something online because as soon as you post it, it becomes public for everyone, even people who you don't know. But if your profile is private, you don't put at risk your identity, so making your profile private is the right thing to do if you want to avoid some dangers.

The behavior on the net is governed by rules called "Netiquette" and by laws that clearly define what constitutes crime and what doesn't.
